Issue Statement

Software obsolescence poses a major threat to the preservation of born-digital records. New advancements in emulation technology are beginning to offer at-scale solutions to this problem. However, with these solutions come new legal, ethical and practical concerns. In response, I advocate for the creation of a national registry and licensing body for obsolete software and the development of more standardized descriptive practices.